

CHARLES HELBER DIES OF GAS POISONING

San Francisco Chronicle (1869-Current File); Oct 29, 1904;

ProQuest Historical Newspapers: San Francisco Chronicle

pg. 7

CHARLES HELBER DIES OF GAS POISONING.

Charles Helber, who was removed to the Central Emergency Hospital on Tuesday unconscious from the effects of illuminating gas, died at 9:15 o'clock yesterday morning. Helber had taken a room at the Valencia-street Hotel, at 718 Valencia street, paying for a week's board in advance, and retired late at night. The following morning the proprietor found him unconscious, with the gas turned on full. It is believed that the man accidentally opened the key while under the influence of liquor. He recovered consciousness at the hospital before he died, but could tell nothing about the accident.